

Johnny Cha

Jodi Silva

English 12 Honors

11, October, 2019

The Orange Cat in Grade School Hijinx: Black Cat Group Bullies

It was The Orange Cat's typical day at the elementary school. He was going to his class when he heard the voices and sounds from the hallways that were not pleasant for him to hear. They were coming from the group of five black cats apparently accusing and bullying the innocent student in the corner of the hallway. They are known as the Black Cat Group, in which they specialize in the bullying of students in very disruptive and inappropriate ways. They had been formed about five years ago, just before The Orange Cat came to the school, and they have teased, threatened, and for the most part, bullied the students at the school for the longest time. Their skin color is pale black, hence the group's name, and their eyes are colored white like a picture of inverted colors and film negatives.

The group accused the innocent student about the money in the student's pocket. "Where is the money?" the group said.

"I'm sorry," asked the innocent student, "I don't have any in my wallet!"

"Well, if you don't have any money, how about you deserve a beating?" the group replied.

The innocent student was afraid to say anything. And just when he didn't say anything, the group then responded, "Okay, there is no answer. Guys, let's beat him up!"

They then attacked the innocent child violently, until the student cannot move anymore. The group then asked to the innocent student about how he should have money in his pocket.

“Well, next time, bring us the money to us, or else you will deserve another beating from us!” the group said. “See you later, twerp!”

Once the group left, The Orange Cat wondered to himself what was going on in that situation down in the hallways at that time.

“Those guys would not treat that student very nicely,” he asked himself, “I must do something about it at lunch.”

At lunch, he went to the hallways where he heard the unpleasant voices again, and followed down the path where the voices came from, and came up across the Black Cat Group that cornered the innocent student at the end of the hallway. The Orange Cat was wondering about their actions to the student, and he needs to get their attention.

“Excuse me?” he said.

The group then notices him coming towards them, and asked the innocent student, “We’ll be right back, we need to give this guy a lesson.”

The Orange Cat said to the group, “Why are you doing this to this innocent student?”

The group responded back, and asked him, “Well, we got him for the money we’re looking for. And since he doesn’t want his stuff to get stolen, we just had to do our job like we should.”

The Orange Cat wondered, “What did you actually do to him? Tell me more about it.”

The group asked, “Well, we actually threatened them by saying to him that if he declines to accept our offer, then he will deserve a beating. And since he declined to do so, we just did what we had: we beat him up no exceptions.”

The Orange Cat was not happy about this. He told them about the consequences of their actions as a group, and if they ever did that the next time, the group will be kicked out of school.

“No, I do not like this,” he said. “If you ever try to do that ever again, I’m going to call the teacher or principal to come and get you guys for your actions, for what you have done to this innocent student.”

The group was dumbstruck. They then responded back to him, saying that they will engage in a full-on brawlout in the field if he ever say that again.

“Oh, you want to expose us as bullies, solely? You can say that one more time and we will fight you out in the field, right outside the school,” the group said.

“If you wish,” The Orange Cat replied. “You can get caught by playground monitors and advisors out there if you ever encounter a brawlout of any kind out in the field. I warn you, do not ever do that ever again.”

To make matters worse, right after he said it, the Black Cat Group was looking towards him, staring at him like a frozen statue.

The group then said, “Okay then, let’s fight!”

They started chasing after The Orange Cat like a cat chasing a mouse, running around the halls and the inside areas of the school. After speeding through hallways to hallways, rooms to rooms, doors to doors, and around the playground fields, The Orange Cat then ran to a hidden spot where the group cannot see him. As the group started looking for The Orange Cat, they searched around the school for any traces of him, but when they could not find him, they just walked away, saying, “Well, he has disappeared like a ghost. Back to our home base, everyone!”

Meanwhile, at his hidden spot, The Orange Cat has thought up of plans to take down the group of bullies by placing a trap near the area they usually are, and then confronting them about the serious consequences of their own actions. He wanted to change the group for his own good, so he accepted the idea himself, and went to the hobby shop after-school to get a dummy person, a wallet, the fake paper money that almost looks realistic, and a pressure plate with the included traps.

That night, The Orange Cat secretly puts up his traps near the area where the Black Cat Group hangs out, puts the dummy person in the area, and putting the wallet with fake money in the dummy. Finally, he set up the pressure plate and hung the wires to the walls, hiding them precisely so that the group cannot see them.

The next day, during lunch, he went by to the Black Cat Group, and as he went up to them, they said, “Well, what do you want?”

“I have something very special for all of you guys,” he said.

“Oh! What is it? I hope it’s the person with a lot of moola in their pockets!” the group responded.

“Well, lucky for all of you guys,” asked The Orange Cat, “I do!”

And so the Black Cat Group went to the spot where The Orange Cat has his trap set, and found the dummy person. They then went ahead and searched for the pockets and found a wallet, in which they open up to see that the money looked real, but it wasn’t. The group then responded, “Excuse me? Is this the real money or not?”

The Orange Cat replied, “Yeah, it is. That is the real money.”

“But it doesn’t feel like it,” the group asked, “This just feels like an ordinary photocopied paper money that was put in this wallet.”

“Oh, yeah,” The Orange Cat said. “That was my part. To lure you guys into this area.”

“And this person is a fake. It is like a large ragdoll,” the group responded back, “You tricked us!”

They then started chasing him into the next area to where The Orange Cat avoided the areas where he put the traps, and then in the exact same moment, the group pressed on the well-hidden pressure plate on the ground and out came the heavy bags of sand from the ceiling, which collided with the group, hitting them down real hard like magnets. They lay on the floor unconscious, and The Orange Cat walked up to them and said, “Okay, now that I have caught you guys, I’m going to teach you all a very important lesson: You are bullying and torturing the many little, innocent, and respected students here on this campus, and you are the victims of this whole nonsense. My advice to all of you is to never treat anyone bad ever again, and always look forward to your bright sides of yourselves. And make sure to never repeat your actions that you did to those poor, innocent students ever again, it will affect yourself and your people around you. That is all for me.”

The group then responded, weakly, “Okay... We’ll be good from now on... We’ll make sure that we treat each other nicely... And we’ll be sure to never repeat our actions that we did the past five years...”

“Thank you,” The Orange Cat replied, and he walked away, silently, leaving the group lying on the floor unconscious for the rest of the evening.

The next day, The Orange Cat walked to the school where he can see all of the students, teachers, advisors, and the principal gathered up near the Black Cat Group, still unconscious with the sandbags on top of them. He went up to the group and the principal asked, “So whoever could had done this to these people?”

“I did,” replied The Orange Cat, “I had to do it to let them know about their consequences of their actions.”

“You did?” asked the principal, “Why would you do that?”

“I did it because they were bullying, teasing, and disrespecting the students here at the school, and I had to step in and end it once and for all, so that they will never have to do the things that they used to ever again,” says The Orange Cat.

“Oh!” the principal responded, “So that’s why you took them down like this, to end bullying here at our school!”

“Yep!” The Orange Cat replied.

“Hear that, everyone?” the principal said to his students, teachers, and advisors, “This student, The Orange Cat, has taken down the Black Cat Group to stop their acts of bullying in our school! We should give him a round of applause for this brave and kind-hearted student!”

Everyone applauded and cheered for The Orange Cat. The group then wakes up from unconsciousness, removed the sandbags on top of them, and wondered what is happening around them, saying, “What in the world is going on around here?”

The principal notices the group and asks, “I know what you did to all of you guys, and I know what you did to our students at our school, especially your actions as a group consisting of solely bullying other people.”

“Now,” the principal said, “You got to make sure that you will never do any of your actions that you did as a group ever again, or I’m going to have to expel you from this campus permanently. Got it?”

“Yes, sir,” the group replies.

During that day, The Orange Cat walked up the hallways to see the Black Cat Group giving back the cash that they stole to the students that they used to bully as a group, which made The Orange Cat feel proud of himself of what he did to the group. The Black Cat Group had now gone from being a bullying group into a respectful and kind-hearted group that helps the school community.

The elementary school that The Orange Cat has been in is now free of bullies that plagued the school for five years, and now has bullying monitors and advisors around the school monitoring for any kind of bullying happening around the school. One day, The Orange Cat saw a small group of new bullies secretly attacking and teasing one student in the corners of the hallways, but the advisors in the hallways were quick enough to go to that small group and suspend them from being in the school for two weeks. The Orange Cat knew everything worked out after that day, and at that moment, he walked up to the hall of fame and saw his name in one of the plaques that the principal had set up. He was honored as a hero of anti-bullying, making him more proud than he thinks.

Years passed, The Orange Cat and the Black Cat Group had participated in several anti-bullying events and programs in the school, bringing The Orange Cat and the Black Cat Group closely related to them and became close friends with them. What was considered enemies to the group are now considered kind-hearted friends to them, thanks to The Orange

Cat. On the day of The Orange Cat's graduation from grade school, he was given a special plaque for his anti-bullying actions that he did to influence the anti-bully programs and events at the school, as well as giving him and the Black Cat Group medallions honoring them for participating in the anti-bullying programs and events throughout the years.

Years later, The Orange Cat and the Black Cat Group came back to the elementary school they used to go to as guest speakers of anti-bullying during the rallies and assemblies at the school. The two even formed an anti-bullying organization called "The Orange and Black Cat Group of Anti-Bullying", which aims to cover every single aspect of the negative consequences of bullying, and how to stop bullying once and for all. Their legacy of anti-bullying continues to influence other people at their elementary school and their hometown, as well as the whole world. And that is how both The Orange Cat and the Black Cat Group got famous and notable for their anti-bullying measures and methods since that day.

THE END